Two members of Navajo Nation died at Texas Army base

WINDOW ROCK, Ariz. — Navajo Nation President Jonathan Nez and Vice President Myron Lizer issued several letters to congressional members calling for a congressional inquiry and a formal investigation into the recent deaths of two members of the Navajo Nation who were stationed at Fort Hood Army Base in Texas.

It was recently reported that PVT Carlton L. Chee, a member of the Navajo Nation, collapsed during a training exercise on Aug. 28 and eventually passed away at Carl R. Darnall Medical Center on Sept. 2. His death marked the 28th casualty involving military personnel at Fort Hood this year.

In addition, the Office of the President and Vice President recently received information from the family of Army SPC Miguel D. Yazzie, also a member of the Navajo Nation, who lost his life on July 3 while stationed at the Fort Hood Army Base. Yazzie enlisted in the Army in 2016 and served as an Air Defense Enhanced Early Warning System Operator. He was previously stationed in South Korea prior to his death at the Fort Hood Army Base.

Nez spoke with the mother of Chee to offer his condolences to the family and offer support for seeking a congressional inquiry into his death.

“On behalf of the Navajo Nation, we offer our thoughts and prayers for the families of PVT Chee and SPC Yazzie. We spoke with the families of PVT Chee and SPC Yazzie and they have many concerns and questions related to inconsistent information and details provided by military officials. It is very troubling that while they are mourning the loss of their loved ones, they are not receiving adequate and timely factual information regarding the time leading up to their deaths,” Nez said.

The families stated that they suspect that foul play may have contributed to the deaths of Chee and Yazzie, who are among 28 military men and women who have lost their lives while stationed at Fort Hood Army Base.

“Our concern is not only for these two members of the Navajo Nation, but for the many Navajo men and women who are serving in every branch of the military around the world,” Lizer said. “As you know, the Navajo people have a long and proud history of serving in the Armed Forces at a higher per capita rate than any other demographic in the United States.

“This is not only a call for a congressional inquiry, but it is a call for accountability and answers for the families that are grieving for their loved ones,” he stated.

Chee is survived by his parents, five sisters, fiancé, and two sons.
