The world's most powerful nations are taking on their impact to the environment and climate change. The United Nations is leading the way in this effort, with the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) being a key part of the global agenda. The SDGs are a set of 17 goals that aim to address the world's most pressing issues, including poverty, inequality, climate change, and environmental degradation. The United Nations is working to ensure that these goals are achieved by 2030, and is providing support and resources to help countries around the world do so.
