

Corn farmer analogy

Written by 'Layin' it on the line' By Lawrence Castillo Guest Columnist
Friday, 30 September 2022 04:22

---

Pretend you are a corn farmer, and it is time to sow your seeds.

It's spring, and it's time to plant seed corn for the yearly crop. The government shows up and offers you a proposition: You can pay taxes now at a meager rate on just the seed corn, or you can wait until the harvest and pay taxes on the full harvest, all of the kernels on all of the ears of corn on all of the stalks – and, oh, by the way, tax rates are going up before the harvest begins.

How much are they going up between now and the harvest?

Well, who knows, but probably a whole lot. Now, which sounds like a better deal? Upon hearing this scenario, almost everyone would choose to pay their taxes on just the seed and be forever done with taxation, and yet they behave in the exact opposite manner.

You see, investing in a pre-tax 401(k) is similar to paying your taxes on the whole harvest of corn. You get a tax break when you contribute (the seed corn) to your 401(k), which grows tax-deferred. When you withdraw money in your retirement years (the harvest), the tax rate you pay on the money coming out will likely be considerably higher than today's tax rates.

Corn farmer analogy

Written by 'Layin' it on the line' By Lawrence Castillo Guest Columnist
Friday, 30 September 2022 04:22

---

What makes me think that?

Well, the first reason is quite simple: it may not feel like it, but tax rates right now are near historic lows, so it's only logical that they'll go back up in the future, especially given the long time horizon of retirement.

Then there's the unbelievable, breathtaking, staggering national debt. Right now, the debt is nearly $32 trillion, and, as bad as that is, it's a drop in the bucket: we have $160 trillion in unfunded liabilities between Medicare, Medicaid, Social Security, and the public sector pensions.

For every dollar spent, there was a decision made that it would be taxed; it's just a matter of when. The answer in American politics is almost always "later." At some point, all of these liabilities need to be repaid, and tax rates could double or even triple by some estimates. If you ever want to see some sobering numbers, visit usdebtclock.org, and you'll see just how out-of-control our national finances have spiraled.

The final reason that your tax rate might be higher in retirement than now is that you will probably lose most (all?) of your deductions: the kids are long gone (no child tax credit), the house is paid off (no interest deduction), and seniors tend to increase their charitable giving by volunteering more time rather than more money (less philanthropic deductions).

For these reasons, you will likely pay a higher tax rate in retirement than you're paying right now. That certainly sounds depressing, but fortunately, it's avoidable. The government only gets one shot at taxing your money, so would you rather them tax the teeny, tiny seeds or the monstrous harvest?

Most people will say "the seed."

Instead of funding a qualified plan and taking the deduction (seed), consider funding an annuity (no limit on funding). At retirement time, convert the account to lifetime (or a fixed period) income. The IRS has established income withdrawal rules that allow you (under certain

Corn farmer analogy

Written by 'Layin' it on the line' By Lawrence Castillo Guest Columnist
Friday, 30 September 2022 04:22

---

circumstances) to spread any gain you have accumulated in the annuity over a specific period. This could give you more control over your retirement tax liability.

Like all important life issues, seek authorized and licensed advice for what is best for you.

Lawrence Castillo is a member of Syndicated Columnists, a national organization committed to a fully transparent approach to money management.

Lawrence Castillo Host of Safe Money and Income Radio. L and C Retirement Income Planners, 4801 Lang St. NE Suite 100 Albuquerque NM 87109.

Interested in additional information? Register for my FREE Newsletter at 888-998-3463 or click my newsletter link: <https://annuity.com/lawrence-castillo-newsletter/>

Syndicated Columnists is the sole provider of this material, both written and conceptual, for this column. All rights reserved.

'Layin' it on the line'
By Lawrence Castillo
Guest Columnist