Fairies, magic and mischief abounds

What happens when mortals stumble upon the realm of fairies? Magic and mischief abound in William Shakespeare's classic play, now adapted to the stage for young performers.

Children and adolescents should have the opportunity to benefit from an arts education program that is exciting, educational, and meaningful. Gallup Repertory Theater aims to establish such an education. They aim to offer students a space in which they can foster their theatrical aspirations with the guidance of our own ensemble crew.

With the aid and support of dedicated actors, playwrights, and directors within our ensemble, students will be introduced to various aspects of the theatre including: set design, costuming, scene study, line work, and character work, while simultaneously creating and producing their own production.

The Gallup community at large is invited to attend the two performances of A Midsummer Night's Dream, to support these young artists as they shape the words of Shakespeare into a living, breathing production.
