HealthGrades 2019 evaluation of US hospitals reveals the importance of consumer access to high-quality care and analyzes the performance of nearly 4,500 hospitals nationwide as measured by risk-adjusted mortality and complication rates. This analysis identifies the top-performing hospitals, namely those whose outcomes are statistically significantly better than expected.

“Consumers have many choices for healthcare, but most important is understanding that there is a significant variation in care from hospital to hospital and doctor to doctor. In fact, hospitals within proximity to each other can have significant differences in complication and mortality rates for the same condition or procedure,” Chief Medical Officer Brad Bowman stated in a press release. “The analysis of hospital quality is intended to spotlight the importance of doing your homework before selecting your care. It could be a matter of life or death.”
