Graham was also notified that the woman was in a pursuit with the Navajo Nation Police Department, which attempted to stop her when she was coming from Burnt Corn Road. But she did not stop.

When Officer Aaron Marquez arrived at the scene to speak with her, he described her as disorderly. He said she appeared intoxicated, having bloodshot eyes and slurred speech.

Yazzie had difficulty keeping her balance and then tried to get into her vehicle, where the officers began to place her under arrest. She yelled at them to get off of her while she began kicking them in the legs and eventually spat on an officer.

After placing her in his unit, Marquez transported Yazzie to Gallup Indian Medical Center for clearance, during which she continued to be belligerent toward the officers. Yazzie eventually received medical clearance and was transported to McKinley County Adult Detention Center and booked for seven counts of battery on an officer, DWI, no license, and having an open container. Marquez noted in the police report that this was not Yazzie's first arrest for DWI.

Yazzie was released on her own recognizance.
