The Miyamura gymnasium was packed with fans from both sides on Feb. 2 as the Gallup and Miyamura boys' basketball teams faced off. The game started out close, with a low-scoring first quarter and solid defense on both sides. In the second quarter, however, Gallup began to pull away, and Miyamura could never quite catch up. Gallup's quick transition play racked up points, while Miyamura took a more conservative approach and tried to run down the clock. Both teams gave great performances, and the fans were thrilled by the show. In the end, Gallup came out on top, 57-44.
